France Hopes to Lead World in Solar Energy Production, Use

By Geneva Overholser

VEYNES, France, April 28 (IHT)—As Americans prepare to celebrate their first Sun Day on Wednesday the 3,800 residents of this high Alpine village are preparing for their third annual fetes solaires, part of their effort to be-come a tiny solar capital and part of France's rise as a world solar

When the festival occurs this summer, a new solar-heated home will be open for viewing, and locally produced solar cap-tors will be on exhibit, along with a range of smaller products, from fruit driers to boxes for cooking eggs, courtesy of the Alpine sun. Veynes was a railroad center but lost its vitality when France electrified its rail network and eliminated the need for the repair workshops that had been based Wanting to keep the popula-tion from following the migratory trend toward the cities, the town's mayor convinced an industry in Lyons to create a small factory here for the production of solar captors.

That gave rise to the first solar festivities two years ago. Last year, they added a new dimension: Architects were invited to submit plans for a solar-powered home, built on a sun-blessed site donated by the town. A local mason, carpenter and plumber formed a society for that pur-

Veynes has managed to pro-mote itself as an Alpine paradise while furnishing work to part of its population — all thanks to 2,600 hours of sunshine a year. Taking advantage of the sun's energy is becoming more and more common in France. From a large movie theater in central Paris to the Guy-de-Chauliac hospital in Montpellier, from the Nice airport passenger terminal to police headquarters in Bagnois-sur-Ceze, more and more solar water heating and space heating installations are being built in light and transfer its warmth to a reservoir of water, which is then circulated to heat the building. France.

The French government paid half of the 200,000-franc installation cost. And the cinema expects to recoup its half of the initial outlay within five years through a 50 per cent reduction in heating bills.

Though France is "second in the world in the importance of fi-nancial credits consacrated to research in solar energy," according to the February issue of Solar News International, it is far behind the United States. France will spend $32 million this year compared to about $250 million in the United States. But the percentage of the GNP is about the same, the magazine notes.

The head of the new French government post dealing with "new energies" has pledged that 1978 will be "the year of the take-off" for solar energy in Government support is 30 per cent, higher than last year, and represents three-fourths of what is given to research in France under the Delegation of New Energies created three years ago.

The French employer's union has declared its interest in solar energy, and all industries producing solar energy products have recently formed an association called Gesol.

Incentive Program

The government last month announced an incentive program, offering 1,000 francs (about $200) per lodging for installing solar water heaters, which cost between 1,500 and 7,400 francs, depending on size.

Perhaps most important, solar technology to Third World countries, most of which are blessed with ample sunshine but faced with high cost of other en-ergy forms due to underdevelopment. For many of these nations, solar energy is more feasible eco-nomically than it is for France.

So French companies have been concentrating on installing solar water pumps in Mexico and in the northern part of Africa. They have concluded treaties with several Arab countries to provide solar technology assist-

Town Draws Researchers

And they last year organized the International Conference on Solar Energy, to which countries fronting on the Mediterannean were invited. At the meeting, French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said that France wanted to "put what we know into an open file" for the mutual benefit of all, with an aim toward "solar solidarity."

The impetus for this comes from the success that France has had in a town called Odeillo in the western Pyrenees, where researchers come from all over the world to experiment with the high temperatures produced by a huge solar furnace.

This dramatic installation put France on the map as a leader in solar energy, and prompted many of the steps that followed. France is now building two smaller solar stations, and is participating in a cooperative European solar power plant that is under construction in Sicily.

In addition, the state is financing a photovoltaic cells research laboratory in the Maritime Alps.

But future prospects are not as bright as solar supporters here wish. While some U.S. government agencies predict that 20 to 30 per cent of the U.S. energy needs will be met by solar energy by the end of the century, the French government believes that the sun will supply only 2 to 3 per cent of France's needs at that time - compared with 78 per cent to be supplied by nuclear

Rhodesia's New Leaders Face Doubt on All Sides

By Peter Osnos and David B. Ottaway

SALISBURY, April 28 (WP)— One month after its creation, Rhodesia's new multiracial government is beset by major military, political and economic problems as it struggles to find a broad base of support at home and abroad. Notwithstanding signs of encouragement from South Africa and of growing sympathy in some Western circles, the transitional government still stands largely alone.

There is "tremendous apprehension" among whites, in the words of Prime Minister Ian Smith, about the changes that must come, and

A broadcast said that the new Military Revolutionary Council abolished the 1977 constitution and ordered senior military officers to report to the Defense Ministry and be punished by military law.

Claiming that the council controlled all military camps and bases, the rebels banned public dawn curfew and said that all laws would be made by the council.

The last remnant of imperialism and tyranny of the Mohammedzai has been put to an end," Gen. Kader declared, referring to the clan to which both Mr. Daud and the king he overthrew, Mohammed Zahir Shah, belonged. Mr. Daud and King Zahir Shah were cousins and brothers-in-law, and Mr. Daud had headed the government from 1953 to 1963.

Gen. Kader said that the new goverment will follow a foreign policy of "strict" non-alignment, but diplomats in New Delhi were skeptical and refused to speculate on the political orientation of the Military Revolutionary Council.

SWAPO Wants West to Change Transition Plan

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., April 28 (AP)-The South-West Africa Peoples Organization made objections today to key points in a Western proposal for South-West Africa's transition to independence from South Africa and called for further talks to iron out the outstanding issues. Its reply to the proposal insisted that South Africa take a subordi-nate role to the United Nations in managing the political process; claimed that Walvis Bay, annexed by South Africa, was a non-negotiable part of South-West Africa, and said that proposed pre-election re-duction of South African troops to 1,500 should apply throughout South-West Africa, including Walvis Bay. SWAPO repeated its known position that the 1,500 should be confined not in two northern bases but in one southern base. It accepted forces to UN surveillance and monitoring.

"To win over the black people, we have to be seen to be making changes," said Byron Hove, the new black co-minister of justice. "We can't just sing the praises of the [internal] settlement, we have to do something."

It is Mr. Hove's outspoken demand for such immediate signs of change — such as more and higher-ranking black policemen and judg-es — that has upset an already jit-tery white population.

Mr. Smith and his white minis Daud Killed, ters, whatever their private feeling about the coming of black majority rule, are pleading with the 260,000 remaining whites to await the final outcome before "jumping the gun" and leaving.

The black leaders of the transitional government are just as uncertain about the new situation. Still surrounded by white civil servants, secretaries and guards, they are groping for ways to illustrate their new authority to the 6.7 million blacks.

Clearly, this young and fragile experiment in multiracial cooperation poses the dilemma of satisfying Rhodesia's two fundamentally different populations with contrasting fears and hopes. The new ruling Executive Council must also con vince skeptical Western and Afri-can states that it has a mandate from a majority of whites and blacks, including those who belong to the guerrilla alliance, the Patriot-

War Getting Worse

Moreover, it must do this while waging a war that, by most accounts, is going badly and getting worse. The war is costing nearly $2 million a day and even the reported reintroduction of South African military forces in the southern border area is unlikely to provide much relief.

The military situation is exceed-ingly complicated. Military ana-lysts in constant contact with the troops speak of sharply declining morale among white officers.

"Nobody," an analyst said,
"wants to be the last white man to die for Zimbabwe [the African name for Rhodesia]."

In some areas the fighting has virtually halted, partly because local commanders have been told not to seek contact with the guerrillas. Also, it seems that an increasing number of "local arrangements" are being made between the army and guerrillas. The rebels are split into factions that often are as op-posed to each other as to the Salis-

Ambush Feared

While the white-led army is in full flux, a growing number of white farmers are said to be abandoning their homesteads and taking the "chicken run" to South Africa. In fact, Rhodesians say that no prudent white will go outside the main towns unarmed these days for fear of ambush.

It is universally agreed that a cease-fire is essential if this experiment in joint white-black government is to survive until the pro-posed elections next fall for a black majority government.
The black leaders of the Executive Council, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole and Chief Jeremiah Chiran, express confidence that they can pull it off. They tell of daily con-tacts with guerrillas inside Rhodesia in a bid to arrange an end to the fighting. But outside observers, mindful of the military slippage, remain doubtful.

Doubts on Elections

Just how the Executive Council can hold elections amid the uncer-tainties is puzzling. If elections for a black Zimbabwe government are to be accepted abroad, a way must be found to get the guerrillas out of the bush and into the ballot box. Yet their leaders, who have denounced the internal settlement, have scorned overtures to return, Mr. Smith, who boasts of economic accomplishments during 12 years of international isolation, contends that economic problems, particularly the rising number of unemployed blacks, pose the most serious threat to the country. Despite — or because of — economic sanctions, Rhodesia has one of the broadest-based economies in Africa. But the steady exodus of whites and their capital together with the war's drain on manpower underlies the economic crisis.

Early Test Needed

In its statement Tuesday turning down the U.S.-British proposal for an all-party conference, the Execu-tive Council said:

The decision to purchase the series was described by Jochen Stinauer, a spokesman for a region-al station that negotiated on behalf of one of the two major state-subsidized networks, as being made by people who are conscious of the importance of 'Holocaust' and of the value it can have for the Ger-

ZURICH, April 28 (AP)—Swissair President Armin Baltensweiler today charged the Carter adminis tration with responsibility for what he called a disastrous tariff battle between international airlines on North Atlantic routes.

"Remembering a few election promises, the Carter administration is riding on the wave of politically orientated consumer protection and is opening all locks. Mr. Bal-tensweiler told a company meeting. "We believe there will have to be a few victims on the battlefield before common sense prevails again."

He said that Swissair did not join the "panicky flight forward" of some airlines in seeking to retain market shares. Yet, he said, the company had to lower fares to a point where they were no longer meeting costs, despite good sales.

Swissair last year reported a record net profit of 51.9 million Swiss francs (about $26.6 million), an 18.2-per-cent gain over 1976.

NDJAMENA, Chad, April 28 (UPI)-Chadian authorities charged today that leftist insurgents, heavily armed with Soviet material, were advancing toward the heart of this former French colony in a new violation of the March cease-fire.

Parents Blamed for Upbringing, Unhappy Son Files Damage Suit

BOULDER, Colo., April 28 (UPI)—Tom Hansen, unhappy with his life, has filed a damage suit in district court against his parents, who he says gave him an improper upbringing. Mr. Hansen, 25, says that he will need psychiatric care for the rest of his life.

The suit charges that Richard and Shirley Hansen neglected their son's needs for food, clothing, shelter and psychological support at crucial periods of his life and that Mr. Hansen was forced at the age of 14 to "work long hours at menial labor on little food."

The suit, which seeks $250,000 in medical expenses and $100,000 in punitive damages, also accuses Richard Hansen of treating his son as a "social outcast, subjecting him to humiliation and ridicule and physically attacking him."

Tom Hansen's attorney, John Taussig jr., said that the suit may be the first of its kind. "Rasically, what we are doing is bringing a suit for malpractice of parenting," he said, adding that he believes parents should be held responsible for damage to the physical and mental health of their children.

According to the Taiwan newspaper, the Youth Warrior Daily, Mr. Tang had tried to follow the example of Arkady Shevchenko, the Soviet UN under-secretary who refused to return to Moscow. But the Taipei newspaper said that Peking security agents had discovered Mr. Tang's defection plans and put him under strict surveillance until he can be replaced.

Sources here, however, are dubious about the Taiwan report. The elder Tang, who went to New York in the late 1930s to edit the Overseas Chinese Daily, a Chinese-language newspaper, presumably had plenty of opportunities to switch allegiances then. Her bespectacled face and distinctly American accent became familiar to millions of U.S. television viewers in February, 1972, during the Nixon visit to Peking. After that, she served as the official interpreter at almost every meeting Mao or Chou held with English-speaking guests, including the meeting last August between Communist Party Chairman Hua Kuo-feng and Sec-retary of State Cyrus Vance.

In 1975 Miss Tang was promoted from the ranks of interpreters to deputy director of the Foreign Ministry department that oversees U.S.-Chinese relations. She rose

O'Neill Discloses His Net Value Early

By Steven V. Roberts

WASHINGTON, April 28 (NYT)—Describing himself as "a man of modest means," House Speaker Thomas O'Neill jr. disclosed yesterday that his net worth was $181,000. This figure was $56,000 higher than the one Rep. O'Neill provided in December.

The Massachusetts Democrat, whose finances have previously been the subject of controversy, said that his main assets consist of three residences and a piece of land on Cape Cod. He has occasionally invested in stocks and other ventures, but sold most of them before he became speaker in January of

Rep. O'Neill also published his' financial disclosure statement, which is due to be filed by all members of Congress by Sunday. Many members have been grumbling about the disclosure law as the

"It's not as difficult as everyone in the House believes it is," he said.

This income limit, which goes into effect next year, would be codified into federal law by a bill that is now moving through the House.

Many members have complained that disclosing their assets could subject their families to threats of kidnapping and extortion. Some also feel that the income limit is too strict, and in his disclosure statement, which only covered the last quarter of last year, Rep. O'Neill reported an outside income of $13,500, all for speeches made to such groups as the Retail Drug-

Townley Reported Ready to Talk of Letelier Case

U.S. Agency Traces Blob That Hit Town

By Douglas B. Feaver WASHINGTON, April 28 (WP)—Federal Aviation Administration officials yesterday said that they are trying to find the airplane with the leaky lavatory that is responsible for the 25-pound green blob of frozen waste that landed

Sunday in Ripley, Tenn. What some residents thought was an unidentified flying object was actually evidence that the FAA has not completely solved the leaky lavatory problem, which caused an engine to fall from a plane in 1974.

Proxmire Bars Miss Liberty For $1 Coin

WASHINGTON, April 28 (IHT)—Supporters of Miss Liberty — the traditional female figure on U.S. coins — and women's suffrage leader Susan Brownell Anthony (1820-1906) have clashed in Congress over the Treasury Department's plan for issuing a new U.S. dollar

Legislation was introduced yesterday to create the coin and the House subcommittee on coinage will hold hearings next month. Treasury Secretary Mi-chael Blumenthal wants the coin to bear the image of the symbolic Miss Liberty. But the women's caucus in the House of Representatives wants it to commemorate a real woman Susan Anthony, for instance. Sen. William Proximire, chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, has promised to amend the bill when it reaches his committee to require it to carry the Anthony image. "Miss Liberty has been or our coinage for nearly 200 years. Sen. Proximire said. To continue this is to shortchange more than half of the electorate of this country — women." Treasury Department officials say the coin, which would re-place the Eisenhower dollar coin, would be made of copper and nickel and would be smaller than a half-dollar but larger Lavatories are flushed with a bluish-green chemical into a holding tank. The flushing tank and the holding tank have outside valves so that they can be filled and drained by ground crews. It is these valves that have been known to leak.

Carter Boosts Role of Office For Consumers

WASHINGTON, April 28 (NYT)-President Carter, saving that the federal government must respond adequately to consumer needs when making policy, yester-day announced a series of actions to strengthen and upgrade the White House Office of Consumer

The actions are an effort by the President to accomplish by executive order some of the consumer goals that he could not achieve by legislation, according to Esther Peterson, Carter's special assistant for consumer affairs

Earlier this year the House of Representatives rejected a bill to create a consumer representation agency, a long-sought goal of consumer advocates that had been backed by Mr. Carter.

Mrs. Peterson said that the chief feature of the changes is that the consumer point of view from now on will be included in all policy papers going to the President's desk. The President directed the White House Office of Consumer Affairs to participate in the development of domestic policy decisions and advise him of the potential impact

Uncertainty in Asia's Center

Down through the centuries, Afghanistan has been the contested invasion route of Asia — a region that has played a part for that continent not dissimilar to the role of Europe's Low Countries. Within more recent times, after the Czarist empire extended over Central Asia and the British over India, the question of who ruled Afghanistan was vital to world politics.

The British have left India and Pakistan. but the Russians still dominate the northern portion of Asia, from the Urals to the Kuriles - and Afghan politics bulk as large as when British troops marched to Kabul or Russians captured Panjdeh in the north in the 19th century, when dynasties struggled for the emirate that sought to govern the land. And now that a military group claims to have seized power from President Mohammed Daud, who had turned his cousin's royal regime into a republic of sorts, the tensions of Kabul reach from Moscow to Washington, from New Delhi and Islamabad

For the United States and the Soviet Union have been competing in Afghanistan albeit in a reasonably constructive fashion through economic and arms assistance. As long as Afghanistan held more or less to the middle of the rocky road every poor state must tread, the strategic problem that the country presented was not acute. With the Marxist and "anti-imperialist" sentiments of so many revolutionary groups in the Third World as well as the thrusting of the Soviet Union (and Cuba) into so many nations, events in Afghanistan are bound to capture the attention of the world.

It is too early to know whether the Afghans will go the way of the Ethiopians, or, if they do, what effect this will have on the nations to the south of the Khyber Pass. What made Ethiopia so important was its conflict with the Somalis; what could give an overturn in Kabul a similar impact is the uncertain position of the Pathans, who live on both sides of the Pakistani-Afghan border, and who traditionally have the sympathies of Afghanistan. But this potential development will doubtless be studied closely by China, which has had a close association with Pakistan, as well as in Washington. All that is certain now is that the center of Asia is uncertain, and that this must make many governments uneasy.

Steep Cost of Substitute Dollars

Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal may face some awkward moments this weekend at the International Monetary Fund's meeting in Mexico City. At issue is a proposal being pressed by the fund's managing director, Johannes Witteveen, to substitute the IMF's own international currency known as Special Drawing Rights - for some of the dollars now being held by foreign governments. The general concept is a good one, but attempting to swap SDRs for dollars now would threaten the fragile structure of international finance.

Witteveen proposes to collect some of the billions of dollars purchased by foreign governments in recent years in (largely vain) attempts to support the dollar's exchange rate. In their place, these governments would get SDRs, the "money" the IMF itself creates. Fund staff members are pushing the plan with the long-term objective of replacing the traditional exchange media - gold and dollars — in government-to-government transac-

A gradual shift to SDRs does make longterm sense. Unlike real gold, the fund's "naper gold" costs nothing to produce. But substitution today - even serious talk of substitution — might have quite the opposite effect. Exchange rates are unstable because corporations and individuals with vast financial resources can and do switch from currency to currency in attempts to avoid exchange risks. Paring away $10 or $20 billion held by governments would have no effect on the $500 billion now sloshing around international financial markets.

It is possible, moreover, that the substitution of SDRs for dollars by foreign central banks would make nervous private currencyholders readier to dump their dollars at the first sign of trouble. If the closest allies of the United States are unwilling to keep their dollars, the reasoning might go, why should we?

Pessimists suggest an even graver result of the plan. Oil prices are now set in dollars and OPEC's strongest member, Saudi Arabia, holds most of its surplus billions in dollars. The depreciation of the dollar has led some OPEC members to demand that oil be priced in SDRs whose value is not sharply affected by the dollar's decline. Should Europe and Japan signal their distrust of the dollar by switching to the SDR it is possible that OPEC would also switch. The result could be higher oil prices for everyone - all countries pay OPEC in dollars - and the creation of yet another source of instability in world ex-

If little good and much harm could come of the Witteveen plan, why should Secretary Blumenthal's opposition be met with hostility? The IMF staff, committed to promoting the SDR, believes that substitution for dollars is the only way to get European bankers to go along with a new issue of their "paper More important, though, the plan could become a focus for foreign governments angry over the Carter administration's refusal to help stabilize the value of the dollar. Many governments would prefer a world in which the dollar played a less critical role in international finance, and the substitution plan is a gesture in that direction.

Neither reason is good enough to disturb the status quo. Other governments might get some satisfaction from a symbolic slap at U.S. policies. But they stand to lose as much as the United States from any further decline of the dollar or increase in oil prices. SDRs do eventually deserve a more important place. in international finance, but their role should only be upgraded in calmer times.

Other U.S. Opinion

Remember the Concorde?

A year ago, most people living around New York's Kennedy International Airport were adamantly opposed to letting the French-British supersonic jetliner land there, even on a test basis, because of its alleged noise and pollution. Today, four months since the Concorde finally began using Kennedy, there is a dramatic change. The latest FAA sampling shows that the opposition has dropped to 36 per cent of 1,818 airport-area residents surveyed. Those approving has climbed to 24 per cent. The Concorde may be a technological marvel or a fuel-wasting white elephant. But, as it has demonstrated both at Kennedy and at Dulles Airport outside Washington, it is as good a neighbor as many commercial jets flying today and it is certainly not the environmental ogre its opponents would have you believe it is.

Different U.S. Responses

When the UN Security Council last May voted unanimously to have Rhodesian information offices shut down around the world, the State Department sheepishly hastened to oblige. If the UN resolved to put the public library to the torch, the State Department probably would not resist; and only vigorous protest by conservative civil libertarians kept the Rhodesian information office in New York from being boarded up.

Consider, if you will, the remarkably different response to the suggestion that, as a protest over continuing terrorism, Washington close the New York office of the terrorist Palestine Liberation Organization. The State Department that promptly notified the Rhodesians to pack their bags — was struck dumb by the very idea of ordering the PLO to skedaddle. When Washington finally got around to responding, the response was to reiterate its welcome to the terrorists.

Energy and the Sun

The sun alone may not be the answer to the nation's energy problems. It may not even be a partial answer of real significance in the very near future. But because of its environmental cleanness and its inexhaustible supply it certainly deserves serious attention as a possible solution.

For that reason, the recent evidence that it is receiving a high degree of attention, and in places where attention really counts, comes as a decided encouragement to all who understand the crucial nature of America's energy problems.

The New U.S. Diplomacy of Incoherence

By James Reston

WASHINGTON—The conduct of U.S. foreign policy seems very strange these days. There is a great deal of running around and popping off, with everybody mind-ing somebody else's business, but with very little coherence or visible

This is apparently the New Diplomacy, or if you prefer, the democratization of foreign policy, but the net result seems to be that nobody now knows who can speak for the United States, not even the President, with assurance that his commitments will be honored.

The U.S. promise of F-15 fighter aircraft to Saudi Arabia is only the latest example. It was made originally by President Ford and then confirmed twice by President Carter, but is now challenged by the Congress, which is fair enough.

This is a decision, under present law, for both the executive and leg-islative branches of the U.S. government, but Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan is here lobbying for the shipment of planes to Israel, which is understandable, but also against Carter's decision to sell planes to Saudi Arabia, which is not exactly the same thing.

Rump Session

For example, Dayan met Thursday morning privately with Sens. Church, Case, Javits, Stone, Sar-banes and Jackson, all supporters of the Israeli case against the Presiof the Senate Foreign Relations economic questions. Committee, all the senators being dembers except Jackson out taking any more testimony or holding any public hearings.

This is one aspect of the new "democratic" foreign policy proce-dure that its so controversial that it may be overturned in the next few days, but it is an illustration of the confusion of authority that is now baffling this capital, and many other capitals as well.

Also, just to add to the confusion, there is a serious question here whether any legislation au-

President's authority to sell these planes is constitutional.

This is a complicated point, now under fierce debate. But since delegations of quasi-legislative authoribranch agencies can only be accom-plished by legislation involving the assent of both Houses of the Congress and the President, it can be argued that any measure withdrawing that delegation as exercised in a particular case, would likewise require legislation involving the assent of both Houses and the Presi-

All that will probably have to be left to the courts at some future time. Meanwhile, the view at the White House is that the main issue at stake is the President's right and ability to conduct the foreign policy of the nation, without excessive interference by the Congress or the ministers of foreign states.

in some ways, the Carter admin-istration has invited these problems. It has scattered executive authority in the field of foreign affairs, so that nobody quite knows whether the secretary of state, just out of Moscow on a consoling mission, or Zbigniew Brzezinski, now on his way to China, or Vice President Moscow on a bis way to China, or Vice President Moscow of the Presid dent Mondale, on his way to South-east Asia, is really speaking in a coherent voice for the President.

Also, if the Carter administration presumes to tell Rhodesia that it is not satisfied with the internal com-promises reached for the political future of that country, it cannot be surprised if Dayan comes here to lobby for Israel - though arguing his case with senators is not the same as his legitimate right to state his case to the secretary of state and the President, who are the re-sponsible officials.

So there are not only fundamental differences of policy but equally important differences of procedure.
As one high official here put it, what would Prime Minister Begin say if Cy Vance met in private with opposition leaders of the Knesset and argued against Begin's poli-

But in private it is concerned that this sort of diplomacy can lead only to more confusion and division, and an erosion of the President's influence on the serious world arms and monetary ques-

For example, the Educational Development Corp., of Newton, Mass., has a $70-million contract which involves running technical universities, handing out bachelor of science degrees to Algerians and switching students from French to English.

Most of the U.S. firms are settling in for contracts stretching over 10 years — five years to build a factory and five to make sure it runs smoothly and that thousands of Algerians are trained for the job. At Sidi Bel Abbes, a former French Foreign Legion garrison town, hundreds of U.S. technicians, their wives and families - plus doctors, and teachers — have moved into newly built housing to carry out the GTE contract. U.S. companies complain that Washington is still not helping them with export financing in the way that West European governments or the Japanese are aiding their firms. But U.S. executives do not complain that political differ-ences between radical Algiers and nonradical Washington get in the

Computers Tee Off in Japan Golf

By Ken Ishii

TOKYO-After considerable thought, much argument, and doubts that the whole thing will work at all, the Japanese have de-cided to computerize golf handiwith the world's second largest golfing population (10 million) atter the United States, the Japanese have adopted everything there is to know about golf from the West—that is, everything except the handicap.

A golfer's handicap, as every duffer knows, is the measure of his current playing ability. If he turns in good scores, his handicap is reduced. For high scores, his handi-reduced. For high scores, his handi-cup is increased.

The Japanese have a somewhat different definition. The Japanese duffer's handicap indicates the quality of golf that he played when his game was at its peak, and need not necessarily have any relation to the scores he happens to be turning at the moment. His handicap will be lowered as his game improves at the moment. His handicap will be lowered as his game improved but rarely will a succession of bad scores be considered grounds for increasing it. Anyone no longer able to play to the handicap that he earned in his best days is simply considered to be "off his game."

Upgrading

The rationale for this line of thinking is the same as that applied to grades in judo, kendo, Japanese chess and other traditional sports.

Grades go up, but never down.

And this, in turn, leads us to the heart of the matter. In Japan's group-oriented society, rank is of paramount importance, for the individual identifies himself in terms. of the position he holds in his particular group. Hence demotion re-sults in a serious loss of fare, a humiliation to be avoided at all costs. A man who presents his name card without a title is a nobody. By the title on a visitor's name card, one knows immediately how much respect to accord aim.

Given this background, the Kanto Golf Association has made a bold decision. According to KGA officials, about 50 of the KGA-affiliated golf courses in central Japan have subscribed to the new system, and more are expected to follow.

Members of KGA-affiliated Members of KGA-allitated courses may send their scores to the KGA computer system which will keep their handicaps, up to date. The assumption is that having handicapping done by a unified system instead of leaving it to the discretion of individual clubs will discretion of individual clubs will encourage golfers to turn in scores, good or had, wherever they play.

Resistance

senerally ignore bad scores. The KGA system does not. The ques-tion is, will Japanese golfers cooperate. Some are beginning to, but resistance is still strong.

For example, while submission of all scores is required in theory, it is not mandatory. The presentation of only one score card a year is sufficient to keep a handicap valid.

Moreover, as the new system now works, it is open only to golfclub members. Since only two out of 10 golfers can afford to buy club memberships, this leaves out most of the golfing population.

A few years ago, the Japan Golf Association — the nationwide or ganization under which the KGA and other regional associations function — was approached with the idea of a nationwide, computerized handicapping system that would enable all golfers, club manbers or not, to submit scores from any course. But the JGA turned it down on grounds it was impossible to exercise adequate supervision over the authenticity of duffers

Rank Reaction

Since rank is important, careful control must be exercised in the manner in which it is awarded lest the prestige of the issuing authority be jeopardized. So, rather than take the risk itself, the JGA decided to let the KGA make the first move.

Everyone from JGA's president on down agrees it doesn't make sense for a duffer who can no long er break 100 to have to carry the 10 handicap he once played to Japanese golfers, however, have managed to circumvent his inconsistency by having two handicaps — an "official handicap" issued by the club, and a more-realistic "private handicap" agreed upon by the buil-dies he regularly plays with.

Whether the KGA's experience will have the intended results remains to be seen. Will it succeed in breaking down rank-consciousness, or will it merely computerize in Let's wait and see.

Contrasting the Attitudes of Collectors

By Souren Melikian ONDON. April 28 (IHT)— Should one collect for love, as the spirit moves one and opportu-nities present themselves? Or is it advisable to concentrate on one theme such as the work of a single artist in a given area? The contrasted attitudes were illustrated Tuesday and Thursday by two collections auctioned at Sotheby's. Both came from the United States and both had been built up over many years by enlightened amateurs from the show-business

Daniels of New York, whose collection of 80 old master drawings sold Tuesday for £169,000, has been collecting for a quarter century. His first love was impressionism and he now intends to devote himself ex-clusively to 19th-century schools, which is what induced him to part with his earlier pieces.

Although no deliberate plan guided his purchases, Daniels did have a strong feel for studies of the human body. Portraits, male nudes, baroque scenes, such as the vision while naked humans watch and gesticulate on earth (by Gaspare Dizidni and sold for £4,400 to D. Tunick of New York), altogether made a consistent pageant.

Like any collector buying on the spur of the moment. Daniels adquired, or refined, a flair and made shrewd buys. One of the most

The other unusual drawing was a nude study by Francois Boucher done in 1753 for the figure of Apol-lo in his painting "The Raising of the Sun," now in the Wallace Collection. Stock pointed out that the drawing was used by Boucher him-self when he taught at the Ecole Academique de Dessin at Orleans. At £38,500, this, too, doubled its original estimate, underscoring the appreciation due to rarity backed by unimpeachable authenticity.

The play has a genuine, lurid power, excellently realized in Ron

There is some excellent comic relief supplied by Peter Clough as a doltish suitor and Paul Imbusch as his more worldly uncle, which provides a necessary counterpoint to the bloody violence and passion as

Ford's characters make even the double-crossing, vindictive and warring noblemen of the third part of "Henry VI" at the Aldwych seem quite normal, well-behaved

This last part has perhaps the most electrifying moment in the sequence, the confrontation between the victorious Margaret and the defeated York. In its passion it is almost operatic, and Helen Mirren's vicious queen and Emrys James's broken pretender make it intensely moving.

It is often the most artificial moments in the plays that have the greatest effect. The farewell in rhymed verse between David Swift's bulldoglike Talbot and his young son is another highlight of the sequence.

But what is especially impressive is the sweep and magnificence of the whole, the coherence imposed by the authority of director Terry Hands and his actors. It is a superb Surrounded by photographers and obviously loving every minute of it, the mayor was attending the New York-based charity ball, which for 27 years has distributed more than $4 million to French charities. The ball, founded by C.C. Philippe and the late Elsa Maxwell, is normally held in New York and in November. It was the first time that it was held in Paris and in April. The purpose of the Paris ball, a smaller and choicier affair, was to serve as social padding for New York's mammoth and money-making ball, which will still take place next fall.

The party last night turned out to be much more than a party. Mr. Chirac declared his love for America and the Americans.

The mayor said he would like to go to New York, adding: "As a matter of fact, I'm planning a trip to the United States soon because I know that my image is very bad there. I want to change it.

Canada Sets Large Loans In Europe

Financings Aimed At Bolstering Reserves

OTTAWA, April 28 (AP-DJ)— The Canadian government an-nounced today two large interna-tional financing arrangements to bolster its official monetary reserves, [Sinclair Steven, Conservative party finance critic, said the decision to borrow abroad to support the Canadian dollar will not solve domestic economic problems, but just postpone them. Reuters report-

The financings involve Deutsche mark borrowings totaling 1.5 bil-lion DM and a "large" but as yet unspecified revolving standby credit facility in U.S. dollars.

However, it is understood that the government is negotiating a standby credit line of at least $1 billion. The facility would be for an eight-year term and would carry rates tied to the U.S. prime.

The borrowings in DM consist

• 600 million DM of five-year. 4% percent notes to be sold at a price of 99½ to yield 4.86 percent. This will be sold through a syndicate of international banks in the Eurobond market. • 500 million DM of six-year, 5 percent notes priced at a discount to yield 5.20 percent a year. This is a loan from lead manager Deutsche Bank made against underlying securities and will not be marketed by the bank. • 400 million DM of a four-year. 5-percent fixed-rate loan priced at a discount to yield 5.35 percent a year. This also is a direct loan from Deutsche Bank and will not be syndicated among other banks. The higher yield on this short-dated loan reflects the fact it is not secured by underlying assets. The Finance Department said the new U.S. dollar standby credit is being negotiated with a group of non-Canadian banks. Canadian banks are not being invited to participate in the arrangement because they have already provided a standby facility to the government total-ing $2.5 billion. In addition, the government also raised $750 mil-

Foreign Buying Buoys Wall St.

NEW YORK, April 28 (AP-DJ)—The flood of lor-eign capital into Wall Street, which has helped boost the recent rally on the New York Stock Exchange, shows little sign of slackening soon, analysts say.

The key to the inflow, analysts agree, was the growing feeling earlier this month that the dollar was nearing the bottom of its long slide in foreign-exchange trading.

Some analysts even credit foreign investors with triggering the market's rebound. And at any rate, the foreign buying spree has certainly contributed to the record trading volume and the sharp rise in prices—particularly for the blue chips in the Dow Jones in-

The Dow Jones has risen 8.3 percent, or more than 63 points, since April 12, closing yesterday at 829.92. Standard & Poor's composite index during the same period gained 6.3 percent, or 5.75 points to 95.86, while the market-value index on the American Stock Exchange was up 2.5 percent, or 3.31 points,

Although heavy trading by U.S. institutional investors such as pension funds, mutual funds and insurance companies, has dwarfed other factors in the upsurge, analysts say foreign "buy" orders have been significant and are continuing. Moreover, "I don't think overseas interest in Wall Street will dry up soon," says Henry Safran, manager of the Lon-don office of Bache Halsey Stuart Shields.

The only attractive stocks in the world markets at the moment are in the U.S. and Singapore—and if you go for fundamentals, it is the U.S.," says another Bache representative, Yeo Boon Khim, in Singa-

C.Y. Chung, vice president of Sun Hung Kai Securities, a subsidiary of Hong Kong's largest stock brokerage firm adds that turnover in U.S. stocks has doubled in the last two weeks.

Not all non-U.S. investors are spending money on Wall Street however. Many Japanese money managers bought U.S. stocks last year and were doubly burned by the market's decline and the sharp appreciation of the yen and are still leary of Wall Street. "Japanese investments in New York stocks are on the property that they have been affected." the runway, but they haven't taken off yet," says an official of Nikko Securities, one of the top four brokerage firms in Tokyo. Another factor, analysts add, is the boom on their own exchange.

Another notable exception is Mideast oil money, which has generally favored more conservative U.S. investments. In London, David Sambar, executive vice-president of the Sharjah group, an investment advisory firm for Arab husinessmen, says that "we advisory firm for Arab businessmen, says that "we haven't seen any demand (for U.S. stocks) on the part of our clients." Despite the "psychological euphoria" on Wall Street recently, he says, "the basic problems in the U.S. economy are still there. We aren't sure that anything more than lip service has been paid to the problem of inflation." and strength in corporate earnings has been spotty, he adds.

However, U.S. stocks have gotten much cheaper for investors in Britain, West Germany, Switzerland and other countries as a result of the weakness of the dollar against their currencies.

Another reason for the general foreign interest in U.S. stocks is that other national markets, with the exception of Tokyo, have not been as attractive to investors. The investments also reflect some improvement in the overseas assessment of the Carter dministration as well as the relative health of the U.S. economy in comparison with other nations.

"We feel there has been a correction in the previous lack of confidence in the administration," says Hans Kessler, senior vice president of Swiss Bank. Corp. "The Swiss have returned heavily to the U.S. market in the last few days," he adds.

OPEC-U.S. Transactions Said Balanced

WASHINGTON, April 28-A study of direct transactions between the United States and members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries showed they were virtually balanced from 1974 through 1977, the Commerce Department reported today.

The report said the United States had a $36-billion deficit in transactions on goods and services in the three years. U.S. payments for im-ports from OPEC countries totaled $106 billion. U.S. receipts from exports of goods and services totaled $70 billion. But the cumulative cap-ital inflows from OPEC totaled $38

The figures exclude indirect transactions, which the department noted were probably sizable.

The report also outlined a switch in OPEC investment stragegy since 1974. Four years ago, OPEC members were mostly investing in U.S. treasury obligations and commercial bank certificates of deposit. In subsequent years, the report said, Mideast members of OPEC diversi-fied their portfolio holdings by acquiring some U.S. corporate stocks and bonds while other OPEC members generally reduced the rate at which they placed funds with U.S.

Adverse U.S. Reports

In Anti-Inflation Move

NEW YORK, April 28 (AP-DJ)—The Federal Reserve escalated its war on inflation yesterday by tightening its credit reins for the second time in little over a week and major banks responded today by raising their interventions.

By boosting to 71/4 from 7 percent its target interest rate on federal funds, uncommitted reserves banks lend each other, the Fed placed sharp upward pressure on commercial banks' prime, or minimum, interest charge on corporate loans, which has been at 8 percent since early this year. Chase Manhattan Bank responded today by raising its prime rate to 8¼ percent. Chase's move was followed by several other major New York banks and, although Citibank kept its rate unchanged at 8 percent, analysts think the move will become industrywide by next week.

In foreign-exchange trading, the dollar firmed against major currencies as a result of the higher prime rates, dealers said.

Analysts also expect the Fed to soon boost to 6% or 7 percent from 6½ percent its discount rate, the interest charged on loans to member com-

There are no ifs, ands, or buts about it—the Fed tightened," stated David M. Jones, an economist for the securities firm of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. "You've got to give (Fed chairman William) Miller credit" for his determination to light inflation, he added.

The Fed signalled the tightening by allowing the interest rate on federal funds to rise to 7 5/16 percent yesterday before taking offsetting action. The interest rate on federal funds serves as an indication of the availability of reserves in the banking network and serves as a kind of base from which most other interest rates are scaled upward. "It will probably trigger a substantial increase in member bank borrowings from the Fed and result in a boost in the discount rate," said Mr. Jones. With the discount rate at 6½ percent, well below the rate on federal funds, banks are likely to take advantage of the relative bargain by borrowing from the Fed. In the week ended Wednesday, when federal funds hovered around 7 percent, member bank borrowings from the Fed jumped to an average of $760 million from $203 million the previous

The tighter credit policy has had a beneficial effect on the dollar, tempering the need for foreign central banks to acquire the currency in support operations. Thus, central banks have had a shrinking number of dollars to invest in U.S. government securities. The Fed reported yesterday that its holdings of government issues in custody for foreign central banks and official institutions dropped $1.63 billion in the week ended Wednesday—the largest one-week drop since a $1.78-billion fall in mid-

LONDON, April 28 (AP-DJ)— Markets, the bank said there are The dollar generally edged up "some serious questions about fun-"some serious questions about fundamental economic trends and their implications for the dollar's course medium-term. The United States faces an "adverse inflation differential interna-tionally," it said, adding that the administration's inflation record in its first year "hasn't been good." It to keep growing faster in 1978 than those of most other industrial nations, a factor that is likely to have a negative impact on the trade

Morgan predicted the current account will "at best" post a deficit of $20-$25 billion this year, against a gap of $20 billion last year. At the same time, the bank foresees Japan's current-account surplus at a minimum of $16 billion this year. West Germany and Switzerland may have surpluses of $4-$5 billion each, it said. The bank said that exchange rate adjustments can have only a limited role in reducing international payments imbalances, because rates are heavily managed by Euro-pean and Japanese authorities for competitive reasons. Therefore, it said, structural changes in the United States, Japan and Europe are needed to deal with the imbalances.

Japan Sees Rise Of 10.5% in '78 Capital Outlays

TOKYO. April 28 (UPI)—Japanese companies will invest 6.9 trillion yen (about $31 billion) in plant and equipment in fiscal 1978, up 10.5 percent over the previous fis-cal year, the Ministry of International Trade and Industry announced today.

A ministry survey early this year of 1.319 private firms in 13 industries, pointed out investment by the manufacturing sector will drop 4.9 percent but that of nonmanufacturing industries would increase 27.4

It forecast investment in the steel ndustry will fall 19.4 percent from the previous fiscal year as well as a 34.4-percent drop in the petro-chemical industry and 47.8 percent in the synthetic fiber field. Auto industry investment will drop 5.8 per-

The report predicted a 5.6-percent rise in the electronics and elec-tric machinery industries. Spending by the electric power industry wil be up 30.3 percent.

Prices Rise .8% in U.S. In March

Consumer Index Up 6.5% From Year Ago

WASHINGTON. April 28 (UPI)—Higher prices for groceries, energy, clothing and housing boosted the U.S. cost of living 0.8 percent in March, the Labor Department ment reported today.

The rise in the consumer price index in February was 0.6 percent, down from 0.8 percent reported in January. Today's report indicates the February decline was only a pause. On an unadjusted basis, the price index was up 6.5 percent from the year-earlier level.

A presidential spokesman said the White House is "of course disappointed" in the rise but that it is "too early to conclude that we've seen any fundamental worsening in the inflation outlook."

The Labor Department also said the spendable earnings of an urban worker with three dependents rose 0.2 percent in March. But earnings after deductions for taxes and consideration of inflation remained lower than they were in December.

Spendable earnings are still lower than at the end of 1977 because the big increase in social security taxes cut income 2.9 percent in January when it took effect.

The department said the retail price index of all goods bought by consumers stood at 189.8 in March. which means goods that could be bought for $10 in 1967 cost $18.98 last month. Grocery prices rose 1.5 percent in March while prices for gas and electricity increased 1.4 percent, reflecting the higher wages won by coal miners in exchange for ending their 110-day strike. There were 1-percent increases for housing, new clothing and up-keep on older apparel. Health expenses, which have come under attack by President Carter for rising faster than any other consumer item for more than a decade, increased 0.6 percent compared with 0.8 percent in the previous two

The Agriculture Department reported that prices of raw U.S. agri-cultural commodities rose 4 percent in the month ended April 15 following a similar rise the previous month. The increase was attributed primarily to higher prices for livestock, soybeans, corn, broilers and tics office said here today.

The index itself will be released in about 10 days, the office said. In March, the index rose 0.3 percent from February and was up 3.1 perrent from the year-ago month.

THE PROTESTANT TEMPERAMENT Patterns of Child-Rearing, Religious Experience, and the Self in Early America

By Philip Greven. Alfred A. Knopf. 431 pp. $15. Reviewed by Fred M. Hechinger

scholarship wears a bright halo in academic world and is worshipped by the general public. It is therefore not surprising that many able historians suffer from science envy, a condition that makes them clutter up perfectly sound research with an artificial "categorizing" copied from the way scientists classify the elements. Unfortunately, what works in explaining the orderly scheme of nature is often less successful in attempts to explain the more com-plex relationship between human nature, history and politics.

Philip Greven is a case in point. In "The Protestant Temperament," he has brought together many fascinating and historically enlightening accounts of child rearing in early America. He has diligently explored the connections, between religious doctrine and attitudes toward childhood. He once again provides interesting insights into the early American family as he did in his earlier writings. But, instead of allowing history its scope of con-tradictions and uncertainties, he tries to squeeze his findings into a set of classifications—fitting all early Americans into the slots of 'evangelicals," "moderates" and Greven offers an awesome and eloquent account of the early Puritans' unbending devotion to a stern and demanding God. It was a devotion that allowed no straying from a path of self-sacrificing purity. All carnal desires, even between hus-band and wife, were regarded as temptations of the devil, and since children thus were born of sinful activity ("filthy" is the term fre-quently applied), they were considered in a state of natural evil. Their will had to be broken before they could, in turn, devote their lives to total obedience to God and parents. The harmony of the family under such circumstances flows, not from love, but from submission-women to men, children to parents, men to God.

Particularly fascinating is Greven's discovery of this evangelicals' constant fear that servants and grandparents might act as corrupters of children by secretly of-fering them forbidden kindness. Grandparents were, of course, more troublesome since they were immune to the rule that it was better to lose a good servant than to bring up a bad child.

Today's conservatives, inheritors of the evangelical theory of child rearing might well be reminded that Greven's picture of Puritan parents, though accurate in theory, should not obscure the fact that even the stemest of them did love their children in their fashion. Cotton Mather, who was survived by only two of his 15 children, was moved during a measles epidemic in 1713 that claimed three of his children and his wife in less than two weeks to make this moving entry in his diary:

"Nov. 21. This day I attended the Funeral of my two: Eleazar and of The New York Times.

Modern America views scientists as the aristocrats of Scholarship. "Scientific method" She was two years, and about seven Months . . . Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me!" Greven develops an interesting theory about the conflict created by the attitudes of evangelical men toward women and toward God. On the one hand maleness was characterized by "activity, strength, combativeness, wisdom and greatness of soul, compared with femi-ninity's "passivity," weakness, dependency, emotionalism, and self-doubt." Yet, in their relationship to God, men assumed the submissive—thus female—role.

The discussion of the "moderates" begins with interest-ing observations of child rearing. Breaking the child's will is replaced by a more gentle bending; love sub-stitutes for fear; obedience arises from respect, not domination. In Greven's scheme, this relaxation of the reins appears as something of a transition to ultimate delegation of childcare by the "genteel" to a staff of servants, leaving the parents as a remote but dimly respected and filially loved authority.

The strain such categorizing imposes on the natural floor of history stems from the lack of any credible temperamental kinship between such "moderates" as John Adams, Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin, among others. It would be easier to ascribe their common bonds to intellectual roots in the Age of Reason than to any artifi-cially created rubric. Jefferson's pioneering insistence on the separation of church and state, for instance, is surely more than mere moderation of the evangelicals' religious zeal. And the genteels' exub-crant enjoyment of the good life, including wine, women and song, seems to be very simply the result of worldly success. Those who had grown conservative with wealth and established social status were understandably prone to loyalty to the status quo, including the British monarchy. If such amusing docu-ments as the raucous diary of William Bird prove anything, it is merely that this period, too, had its equivalent of Beautiful People and Dirty Old Men. (After a wild night with a woman he had picked up in the park, he remarked, " . . . slept pretty well, but neglected my prayers,")

Much of Greven's anecdotal history is extremely helpful to a fuller understanding of early America's customs and attitudes. Many of the prejudices and myths, particularly those relating to sexual matters, provide a fuller comprehension of American mores and conflicts today. These accounts could readily stand the test of scholarly as well as general-reader interest without Greven's sometimes forced attempts to read too much "femininity" into the period's preoccupation with elegant dress and long hair among the more "genteel," less "moderate" circles.

Who Will Be 2nd Black To Manage in the Majors? stand, with the new ownership, but that's the way it was when I was By Dave Anderson

NEW YORK, April 28 (NYT)—Baseball's once and only black manager, Frank Robinson, is now a coach with the Baltimore Orioles and, understandably, he hopes to be hired as a major league manager again. But becoming baseball's second black manager might be al-most as difficult as having become baseball's first black manager.

"I think baseball has backed off some now," he was saying before the Orioles opened a two-game se-ries at Yankee Stadium earlier this week. "There's no pressure for week. "There's no pressure for baseball to come up with a black-manager now, nobody is kicking up a fuss like they were before the Cleveland Indians hired me."

If there is no fuss, baseball will prefer to snooze on the status quo. But at a time when two of the leading teams in the National Basketball Association have black coaches, Willis Reed of the New York Knicks and Lenny Wilkins of the Seattle Super Sonics, it is to be wondered why baseball (and pro football for that matter) does not consider even one black man worthy to be a motivator or strategist, or both. Another black manager, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn should remind himself, would indeed be in the best interests of baseball.

"I don't want to list everybody who's qualified because I might leave somebody out," Frank Robinson said, "but I think Maury Wills should be a major league manager.

Gradually, a managerial chance for Elston Howard, Larry Doby or Jim Gilliam diminishes season by season. Doby is 53 years old, Howard and Gilliam each 49 — ages when they soon might be considered too old to bridge the generation gap with today's young players. Most young players probably don't even remember those three as big league stars — Howard once the American League's Most Valuable Player as a Yankee catcher, with the Indians for a decade, Gilliam a Dodgers second baseman so row night. smooth he often was taken for granted. of the St. Louis Cardinals.

"I don't know if Morgan or Brock would be interested," Frank Robinson said, "but I think they would be outstanding managers."

Willie McCovey of the Giants is another potential manager. Late last season he asked for an audience with Joe Altobelli and presented the Giants manager with a lineup card that had Bill Madlock at second base. At lunch the day before, Willie McCovey had talked to the two-time National League batting champion about transfer-ring to second base in order to let Clubowners usually prefer to hire managers with experience as managers, even if those managers have been dismissed, as Frank Robinson was in June last year. financially," Frank Robinson recalled. The only free agent they spent big money for was Wayne Garland and he's had arm trouble.

Following his dismissal, Frank Robinson was hired by the California Angels as a batting coach, then he managed Calucan in the Mexi-can winter league. He joined the Orioles' coaching staff two months

"When the Orioles hired me,"the former slugger of the Orioles said with a laugh, "some people won-dered if I would be looking over Earl Weaver's shoulder, and I told them, 'He's only 5-8, I can look over his head.' I'm not after Earl's job. Earl is a hell of a manager. In the dugout I'm listening to him and watching him all the time, hoping I can learn something. I don't sec-ond-guess him. I used to watch him when I was a player but it's different now. I'm on the inside more now. In our meetings, I get to know what he plans to do before he does it. So nothing he has done has really surprised me."

The surprise that 42-year-old Frank Robinson is waiting for is an eventual offer to manage another major league team.

"It's like before I was hired for the first time," he said. "No feelers yet I just hope I get another chance."

"The greater part of Mrs. Stephen's joy, the young Virginia wrote, "lies in the fact that Mr. Gladstone is only vice-president." Called upon to become an expert in Chinese pottery within 24 hours, Dr. Watson repaired at once to the London library. Simlarly pressed. James Bond went there in "On Her Majesty's Secret Service," while Nancy Mitford, in "Love in a Cold Climate," ranked the library with Woolworth's and Harrod's as a point of reference for Paris exiles visiting London.

Its intellectual standards and historical associations are enough to make the library unique; even more remarkable is the love it inspires. don Library is as important to him as his reading glasses, "but unlike them it is al-ways there when I want to use it." Viscount Norwich is even fond of the cooking smells in the Travel and Topography section (an Italian restaurant is next door) and says. "The greatest joy of all is simply being there Affection, Douglas Matthews agrees, is the word that best sums up members' feelings. "It's a very nice feeling that people have." The library, he says, "is a still center in a changing world."

Helpful Staff

One thing that makes the library so pleasant is that the staff, freed from the usual pettifoggery, is there to help. There are no lines for overdue books—"We couldn't possibly," says Mr. Matthews.

Books are never overdue because they are not lent for a mingy two weeks or whatever. In fact, they are not lent for a specific period, although the library rather likes to have them back after a year. "Otherwise, we only ask for a book to be returned if another member asks for it." Although members are not supposed to take out more than 15 books at once, one can arrange to have as many as 40. The catalogoing system devised in the 1890s, has nothing to do with call numbers or other arcane nonsense: A miracle of British pragmatism, it is simply alpha-betical, so even the foggiest writer can find his way about unaided. This leaves the staff free to be kind and pleasant.

"We're in a position where we're able to introduce every new member to the library, Mr. Matthews says. "A senior member of the staff takes them by the hand and shows them the catalogue." The filing system does have a few quirks: The periodical of the Russian Academy of Sciences, for example, is still called by its pre-revolution, imperial name, the Imperatorskava Akademia Nauk because reshelving would have been so com-

Books are also mailed to members although the annual £36 membership fee does not include postage. Aldous Huxley (who mentioned the library in "Antic Hay") or-dered books from California and John Masters is currently doing the same from New Mexico.

Volumes Lost

The library is strongest-which is very strong indeed—in history and literature even though a bomb in World War II destroyed 10,000 volumes and wreaked special havor among biographies of persons with names beginning with letters from G to J and from S to Z.

Only a few books-those that are very rare or are deemed indecent—are under lock and key in what is called the Librarian's Room, "which is not a librarian's room but a very mixed bag," Mr. Matthews says. A first edition of A.A. Milne is next to Henry Miller's steamy Tropics because it follows aiphabetically.

One section that slightly embarrasses Mr. Matthews is labeled Science and Miscellaneous. "It seems to arouse a certain amount of risibility. I wish to God they had just called it Miscellaneous, because that's what it is." Subject headings under Science and Miscellaneous include Sugar, Trusts and Cartels, Tunnels, Sticks (Walking), Vinegar and Women.

At the library's entrance there is a suggestion book with requests for new books and the librarian's comments (usually, "ordered," "this will be ordered," "this will be considered") on the facing page. Recent requests include Renata Adler's "Speedboat" ("this will be considered") an Urdu and Hindi-English dictionary ("this will be ordered"), and a question, "Do you think Mary Wollstonecraft would like to be catalogued under Godwin, Mary M.? Aren't you worried about the feminist reation? ("No").

Many literary lights can be seen on the red leather chairs of the library's comfortable reading room. But if one of the things that irritated Carlyle about the British Museum reading room was that Lord Macauley got better service than he, the London Library treats all its members with equal con-

One of the humblest was the wife of a railroad-crossing keeper who decided to write a Tudor novel. The library staff chose a reading list. "We sent her state papers and calendars," Mr. Matthews says. "She went on to write others and to become quite a successful novelist. We took a lot of personal interest in her, although we never met

The best description of the library was probably made by the formidable Sir Charles Hagberg Wright, librarian from 1893 to 1940 and a man whose sprawling signature was so impressive that Arthur Ransome found a letter from Hagberg Wright on embossed London Library writing paper more useful than a passport when traveling through Russia in 1914. The London Library, in Hagberg Wright's words, is the Soul's Dispensary.

Americans long before the country heard of Watergate, his son-in-law David Elsenhower said. In a maga-zine interview, the 30-year-old Eisenhower said that Nixon faced at the outset of his national political career the "emotional resistance and enmity" of Americans who saw and cameramen who had gather Catifornia as a place culturally untempered by Eastern refinement. Eisenhower also said that Nixon might have been somewhat haunted by the Kennedy family while in the White House, but his real motivation was to measure up to President Dwight Elsenbow David Eisenhower made his com-ments in the June issue of the magazine "Your Place." Asked why Nixon seemed to be able to generate personal hostility as no other figure in recent American history, Eisenhower said, "Well, one reason s that Richard Nixon is a native of California. Suffering from pneumonia in the upper lungs, David Kennedy, the 23-year-old son of the late Robert F. Kennedy and Ethel Kennedy, has been placed in the intensive care unit at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. Kennedy, one of 11 children of the late senator, was said to be in stable condition.

Actor Frank Langella, star of "Dracula," has been presented with the 43d annual Drama League Award for the most distinguished acting performance of the year on Broadway. The award, the bronze Delia Austrian medal, was presented to Langella by actress Jessica Tandy, herself a former winner. The Delia Austrian Medal, named for a former member of the Drama League, has been awarded annually since 1935, when it was won by Katharine Cornell. It is the only acting award in New York voted by audience members.
